

The Introduction chapter of this dissertation is being submitted for public release, even though it is essentially a homework assignment. Therefore, out of an abundance of caution, even though the university advisor and committee have a right to see this unclassified, non-sensitive, work based only on published data, this Link is being blocked. Risk-averse managers at the work-site, that pays my labor to do this work, do not want anyone seeing anything. This misperception by my albeit generous workplace may be an over-reaction due to a recent spillage of international information from a different DoD component, or it may be due purely to internal office politics from people adverse to my getting funding to do this research. However, I am bound to be asked if anything is published, and while this web site is probably completely unseen, it is possible for someone other than my advisor and committee to see it. Therefore, as ridiculous as it is to withhold the Introduction of the Dissertation from the University for which it is being written, please bear with me until I either get public release or have to quit the Navy in order to graduate.

Merci,
